

Table of Contents

Table of Authorities.....	ii
Preliminary Statement.....	1
Statement of Facts and Procedural History.....	3
Argument.....	3
I. The State violates the Fourth Amendment and article I, paragraph 7 when it obtains access to an incarcerated person's recorded telephone conversations without a warrant.....	3
A. Jackson had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the calls he made to his mother from jail.	4
1. Jackson did not forfeit all privacy rights in his telephone conversations by exposing them to jail staff for security monitoring purposes.	4
2. Jackson did not consent to the State accessing his calls for its use in his prosecution.	11
B. Requiring prosecutors to secure warrants in order to access jail calls is the only adequate way to protect the constitutional and policy interests the calls implicate. ..	14
Conclusion.....	20

Table of Authorities

Cases

Birchfield v. North Dakota , 136 S. Ct. 2160 (2016).....	11
Carpenter v. United States , 138 S. Ct. 2206 (2018).....	4, 5, 16
Judd v. United States , 190 F.2d 649 (D.C. Circ. 1951).....	11
Katz v. United States , 389 U.S. 347 (1967).....	5, 15
Kyllo v. United States , 533 U.S. 27 (2001).....	4
Lowe v. State , 416 S.E.2d 750 (Ga. Ct. App. 1992).....	9
Maine v. Moulton , 474 U.S. 159 (1985).....	17
Marcus v. Search Warrants of Prop. at 104 E. Tenth St. , 367 U.S. 717 (1961).....	15
McCoy v. State , 639 So. 2d 163 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994).....	9
Minnesota v. Olson , 495 U.S. 91 (1990).....	5
Miranda v. Arizona , 384 U.S. 436 (1966).....	13
O'Connor v. Ortega , 480 U.S. 709 (1987).....	5, 6
People v. Weaver , 909 N.E.2d 1196 (N.Y. 2009).....	16
Powell v. Alabama , 287 U.S. 45 (1932).....	17
Riley v. California , 134 S. Ct. 2473 (2014).....	15-16
Simmons v. United States , 390 U.S. 377 (1968).....	13
Stanford v. Texas , 379 U.S. 476 (1965).....	15
State v. Catania , 85 N.J. 418 (1981).....	19
State v. Ellis , 246 N.J. Super. 72 (Law. Div. 1990).....	11
State v. Fornino , 223 N.J. Super. 531 (App. Div. 1988).....	19
State v. Guerin , 208 N.J. Super. 527 (App. Div. 1986).....	11

State v. Hampton, 333 N.J. Super. 19 (App. Div. 2000).....12

State v. Hempel, 120 N.J. 182 (1990).....6, 16

State v. Hunt, 91 N.J. 338 (1982).....4, 5

State v. Jackson, 321 NJ. Super. 365 (Law Div. 1999).....7, 8

State v. Johnson, 68 N.J. 349 (1975).....11

State v. King, 44 N.J. 346 (1965).....11

State v. Lunsford, 226 N.J. 129 (2016).....14, 18

State v. Neely, 462 N.W.2d 105 (Neb. 1990).....9

State v. Patino, 83 N.J. 1 (1980).....4

State v. Sanchez, 129 N.J. 261 (1992).....17

State v. Stott, 171 N.J. 343 (2002).....3-4, 5, 6, 7

State v. Younger, 305 N.J. Super. 250 (App. Div. 1997).....12

Stoner v. California, 376 U.S. 483 (1964).....5

United States v. Cohen, 796 F.2d 20 (2d Cir. 1986).....8, 9

United States v. Giordano, 416 U.S. 505 (1974).....19

United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264 (1980).....13

United States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400 (2012).....4, 16

Rules and Statutes

28 C.F.R. § 540.100(a).....14

34 U.S.C. § 6050114

Other Authorities

Criminal Justice Reform Statistics: Jan. 1 - Dec. 31, 2018, Criminal Justice Reform Information Center, available at https://www.njcourts.gov/courts/assets/criminal/cjrreport2018.pdf?c=QDt.....15

Nancy G. La Vigne et al., Examining the Effect of Incarceration and In-Prison Family Contact on Prisoners' Family Relationships, 21 J. of Contemp. Crim. Just. 314 (2005).....13-14

Rebecca L. Naser & Christy A. Visher, Family Members' Experiences with Incarceration and Reentry, 7 W. Criminology Rev. 20 (2006).....14

Preliminary Statement

Jails record telephone calls to maintain institutional security, not to provide prosecutors with a repository of potential evidence. The Middlesex County Prosecutor's Office wishes to launder an unconstitutional search through the Essex County Correctional Facility's security protocols. Neither the Fourth Amendment nor article I, paragraph 7 permit the State to sidestep judicial oversight by delegating an intermediary to do its bidding. But these constitutional provisions hardly ask too much of the State: just that it secure a warrant before collecting recorded conversations between people in jail and their friends and family to comb for inculpatory information.

The State suggests that incarcerated people surrender all privacy rights in their calls because they must consent to monitoring by jail staff for institutional security reasons. But privacy is not a fixed status that attaches to information. It is not an all-or-nothing right. It is a shifting social expectation that resides with the information's owner or originator. Constitutionally, a person can reasonably expect to keep his information private from some onlookers but not others, and for some purposes but not others.

Mark Jackson could not have reasonably expected to keep his telephone calls private from his jailers in their open efforts to promote internal security. He could—and did—reasonably expect to keep the calls private from his prosecutors in their surreptitious efforts to gather evidence against him.

The Court cannot shut its eyes to the plain distinctions between these expectations without shunning the Fourth Amendment and more than three decades of constitutional jurisprudence in New Jersey. The New Jersey Supreme Court has long recognized that individuals maintain a constitutional right to privacy in information that they voluntarily expose to third parties for limited purposes. The United States Supreme Court has endorsed the same analysis, most recently when addressing cellphone location data. Jackson's case only comes out differently if pretrial detainees relinquish all privacy rights, in relation to everyone, when they walk through the jailhouse gates. As a matter of settled law, they do not.

Here, these principles apply a fortiori because recorded phone calls do more than just imply some underlying expressive or associational act. They are expressive and associational acts themselves. Moreover, a pretrial detainee's calls to friends and family may contain information about strategy and trial preparation protected by the Fifth and Sixth Amendments. And not only does capturing these conversations entail a high degree of intrusion, but the State's investigative interests supporting this intrusion are diminished. Uniquely, both the call and caller are captive. The calls are recorded and preserved, making them unlikely to disappear, degrade, or be destroyed before a warrant can be secured. The caller will not, but in the rarest cases, present an imminent threat to public safety while incarcerated. There is no reason to dispense with the warrant requirement for access to jail calls. The trial court recognized this and the Court should affirm its conclusion.

Statement of Facts and Procedural History

Amici curiae the American Civil Liberties Union of New Jersey, the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, and the Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers of New Jersey rely on the statement of facts and procedural history set forth by Defendant in his brief filed on January 31, 2019 and by the trial court in its opinion dated July 16, 2018.

Argument

- I. The State violates the Fourth Amendment and article I, paragraph 7 when it obtains access to an incarcerated person's recorded telephone conversations without a warrant.

Under the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and article I, paragraph 7 of the New Jersey Constitution, a government search that infringes on a person's reasonable expectation of privacy is presumptively invalid absent a warrant issued upon probable cause. See State v. Stott, 171 N.J. 343, 354 (2002). When the government conducts a warrantless search, it bears the burden of proving that the search fell within one of the few narrowly drawn exceptions to the warrant requirement. State v. Patino, 83 N.J. 1, 7 (1980). Jackson had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the calls he made to his family from jail and that privacy interest commands the strictest protection.

A. Jackson had a reasonable expectation of privacy in the calls he made to his mother from jail.

1. Jackson did not forfeit all privacy rights in his telephone conversations by exposing them to jail staff for security monitoring purposes.

The United States Supreme Court recently reaffirmed that "the fact that information is held by a third party does not by itself overcome the user's claim to Fourth Amendment protection." Carpenter v. United States, 138 S. Ct. 2206, 2217 (2018). Rather, as New Jersey's Supreme Court has long maintained, privacy rights must reflect lived experience. See, e.g., State v. Hunt, 91 N.J. 338, 344-45 (1982); accord United States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400, 406 (2012) ("At bottom, we must 'assur[e] preservation of that degree of privacy against government that existed when the Fourth Amendment was adopted.'" (quoting Kyllo v. United States, 533 U.S. 27, 34 (2001))). Thus, "it is unrealistic to say that" exposing information to a third party sheds "the cloak of privacy" surrounding it. Hunt, 91 N.J.at 347; see also Carpenter, 138 S. Ct. at 2217 (“[W]hat [one] seeks to preserve as private, even in an area accessible to the public, may be constitutionally protected.”) (quoting Katz v. United States, 389 U.S. 347, 351-352 (1967))(internal quotation marks omitted); accord Stott, 171 N.J. at 363.

That is why Fourth Amendment privacy rights in the content of phone calls survive the ability of phone operators to eavesdrop on conversations at will. See Katz, 389 U.S. at 352. That is why privacy rights in hotel rooms and guest apartments survive the owner’s right of access. See Stoner v. California, 376 U.S. 483 (1964); Minnesota v. Olson, 495 U.S. 91 (1990). That is why privacy rights in cell phone location data survive the cell phone companies’ collection and maintenance of the data. Carpenter, 138 S. Ct. at 2217. And that is why a government employee’s privacy rights in his office survive his coworkers’ access for business purposes. O’Connor v. Ortega, 480 U.S. 709, 717 (1987). There is no reason that jail calls should be “exempted from the usual requirement of advance authorization by a magistrate upon probable cause.” Katz, 389 U.S. at 358. The Fourth Amendment does not except jailhouse communications.

Even if the Fourth Amendment’s protections did not apply to these calls, the protections of article I, paragraph 7 unambiguously do. New Jersey courts have consistently recognized that a person can reasonably expect to keep his information private from some onlookers but not others, and for some purposes but not others.

Thus, for example, New Jersey protects curbside garbage from police searches even though the contents are susceptible to inspection by trash collectors. The Court explained that "a person's expectation of privacy can differ in regard to different classes of people." State v. Hemptele, 120 N.J. 182, 205 (1990) (citing Ortega, 480 U.S. at 717). In addition, it is reasonable to expect that those who, by virtue of occupational mandate, may invade another's private materials will do so in a manner delimited by the purposes of their position. Id. at 209. Because a person should not anticipate that a garbage collector will rummage through his discarded trash for any reason extraneous to the duties associated with garbage collection, that person does not reasonably open himself to a law enforcement officer's warrantless search for evidence merely by putting his trash out for pick-up. The possibility of inspection by the garbage collector for one purpose does not prepare him for the possibility of inspection by police for another.

The New Jersey Supreme Court reaffirmed these principles in State v. Stott, 171 N.J. at 363. The defendant in Stott was involuntarily committed to a state-run psychiatric hospital. Id. at 348. After his roommate died of an apparent drug overdose, a detective from the prosecutor's office conducted a warrantless search of the defendant's hospital room based on another patient's report that the defendant was selling drugs. Id. The Court held that the defendant maintained a reasonable expectation of privacy in the area of his room searched by the detective, even though his roommate and hospital staff had effectively unfettered access to the space. "We would expect doctors, nurses, and other hospital personnel to inspect all areas of such a facility to ensure that patients are not in a position to harm either themselves or others," the Court explained. Id. at 362. But the appeal presented the Court not with "[t]hat type of hospital-related action," but rather "with police conduct . . . within the framework of a criminal investigation." Id. at 362-63. Thus, "[t]he participation of law enforcement officers transformed this search from what might have been an objectively reasonable intrusion by hospital staff into the kind of warrantless police action prohibited by our federal and State Constitutions." Id. at 363. The defendant may have surrendered his privacy rights as against hospital personnel for safety-related purposes; he did not thereby also surrender his privacy rights as against law enforcement agents for investigative purposes.

The very same logic applies in jail settings, where the reasonableness of a search is bounded by legitimate concerns for institutional security. In State v. Jackson, the Law Division found that correctional staff had conducted an illegal, pretextual search of the defendant's jail dormitory at the prosecutor's behest in an attempt to recover incriminating letters and writings. 321 N.J. Super. 365, 367 (Law Div. 1999). Although the court acknowledged that jail surveillance is necessary and pervasive since "weapons, drugs and other contraband present a serious danger to institutional order," it held that "[t]he search of [defendant's] dormitory area . . . was not remotely connected to any institutional security concerns." Id. at 373, 380. It was, instead, "a pretext designed to permit the prosecutor to invade defendant's limited zone of privacy in order to bolster its case against the defendant." Id. at 380. The search violated the defendant's rights under both the Fourth Amendment and article 1, paragraph 7.

The court in Jackson drew from the Second Circuit's persuasive decision in United States v. Cohen, 796 F.2d 20, 24 (2d Cir. 1986), which held unconstitutional a search conducted by corrections officers at the direction of an assistant United States attorney seeking incriminating evidence. The defendant had a reasonable expectation of privacy in effects searched "at the instigation of non-prison officials for non-institutional security related reasons." Id. The court emphasized that "no iron curtain separates prisoners from the Constitution," and "the loss of such rights is occasioned only by the legitimate needs of institutional security." Id. at 23 (emphasis in original).

Courts in Florida, Georgia, and Nebraska have also echoed Cohen's reasoning. In McCoy v. State, the Florida District Court of Appeals held that a person detained while awaiting trial had a legitimate expectation that he would be protected from a search of his cell for incriminating evidence because the search was "not initiated by institutional personnel and [was] not even colorably motivated by concerns about institutional security." 639 So. 2d 163, 166 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994). Likewise, in Lowe v. State, the Georgia Court of Appeals held that a warrant was required for a "prosecutor instituted search [the purpose of which] was not to maintain security and discipline in the prison, but to further the State's effort to obtain a conviction against a pre-trial detainee." 416 S.E.2d 750, 752 (Ga. Ct. App. 1992). And in State v. Neely, the Nebraska Supreme Court found that a woman detained pre-trial had a legitimate expectation of privacy in luggage removed from her impounded vehicle and stored in the jail's inventory. 462 N.W.2d 105, 112 (Neb. 1990).

Here, the State conducted a search for the explicit and exclusive purpose of obtaining evidence against Jackson. The search was not even pretextually premised on institutional security concerns. Jackson may have shed his right to make phone calls free from monitoring by jail staff charged with maintaining safety, order, and discipline within the facility, but he did not give up his reasonable expectation of privacy from the State's uninvited ears. A prosecutor is not free to commandeer a jail's security practices to make an end run around the Constitution.

Contrary to the State's argument, Jackson did not and could not give up his privacy rights by agreeing to call monitoring. As an initial matter, Jackson was not on notice that a prosecutor might exploit his captivity by seizing and sifting through his recorded telephone conversations for reasons unrelated to jailhouse security. While incarcerated, Jackson signed a form constituting "an agreement between MARK JACKSON and the ESSEX COUNTY CORRECTIONAL FACILITY." Pa 101 (capitalization in original).¹ The last line of the agreement states: "I understand and agree that telephone calls are subject to monitoring, recording, and may be intercepted or divulged." Id. The agreement implied, in light of its context and contents, that the Essex County Correctional Facility might monitor, record, intercept, or divulge conversations based on safety needs—that, at the most extreme, it might turn over recordings to law enforcement if it overheard a threat that it could not adequately address through internal measures. The agreement did not suggest that a prosecutor might, of his own initiative, seek access to recordings in bulk to attempt to extract incriminating evidence. The form did nothing to undermine Jackson's reasonable expectation of privacy from that category of search.

¹ "Pa" refers to the appendix filed on behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant State of New Jersey in this matter.

2. Jackson did not consent to the State accessing his calls for its use in his prosecution.

Neither does the agreement represent Jackson's consent to intrusion by any and all entities, for any and all purposes. Courts analyze consent searches in terms of waiver. See Birchfield v. North Dakota, 136 S. Ct. 2160, 2186 (2016) ("voluntariness of consent to a search must be 'determined from the totality of all the circumstances'"); State v. Johnson, 68 N.J. 349, 353 (1975). And in New Jersey, courts must apply an "exacting" constitutional standard in examining consent to search. State v. Ellis, 246 N.J. Super. 72, 77 (Law. Div. 1990). "Courts will indulge every reasonable presumption against the waiver of fundamental constitutional rights and will not presume their loss by acquiescence." State v. Guerin, 208 N.J. Super. 527, 533 (App. Div. 1986). To be valid, consent to search must be "'unequivocal and specific' and 'freely and intelligently given.'" State v. King, 44 N.J. 346, 352 (1965) (quoting Judd v. United States, 190 F.2d 649, 651 (D.C. Circ. 1951)).

Jackson signed his name to a vague set of terms relating to the "Inmate Telephone System" for the chance to exercise his speech rights and make life-affirming contact with his loved ones. Pa 101. Jackson's purported consent cannot be considered unequivocal, specific, freely given, or intelligently given.

First, when law enforcement carries out a search based on consent, they are "limited by the scope, whether express or implied, of the consent." State v. Younger, 305 N.J. Super. 250, 256 (App. Div. 1997). The State bears the burden of proving that a person who gave consent had knowledge of the scope of the consent search, and the extent of that knowledge defines the outer limits of the search's scope. See State v. Hampton, 333 N.J. Super. 19, 29 (App. Div. 2000). If any consent is grounded in the agreement Jackson signed, it is the narrow consent he gave to the only other party to the agreement: "the ESSEX COUNTY CORRECTIONAL FACILITY." Pa 101. The ambiguous last word of the last paragraph of the form, "divulged," id., unmoored from a clarifying indirect object, cannot possibly broaden the scope of the consent to include any other entity with whom the jail elects to share its recorded bounty, for any reason.

Moreover, even if Jackson gave specific, unequivocal, and intelligent consent to prosecutorial fishing expeditions by signing a form that made no mention of any agency other than the jail where he was being held nor any purpose beyond standard security monitoring, the consent was not given freely. Choosing between entering the agreement or giving up his opportunity to call his friends and family for as long as he remained incarcerated was really no choice at all. It was an unacceptable ultimatum, pitting his privacy rights against his core First Amendment rights. See Simmons v. United States, 390 U.S. 377, 394 (1968) (finding "it intolerable that one constitutional right should have to be surrendered in order to assert another"). The jail environment only compounds the coercion inherent in this constitutional tug-of-war. Pretrial detention can leave an accused especially vulnerable. There are "powerful psychological inducements to reach for aid when a person is in confinement. . . . [T]he mere fact of custody imposes pressures on the accused." United States v. Henry, 447 U.S. 264, 274 (1980) (citing Miranda v. Arizona, 384 U.S. 436, 467 (1966)). No choice a person makes is genuinely free in a setting designed to strip him of his freedom.

A practice that deters people in jail from connecting with their loved ones under threat of losing their privacy rights presents profound policy problems, in addition to constitutional ones. Family contact during incarceration reliably reduces recidivism. See Nancy G. La Vigne et al., Examining the Effect of Incarceration and In-Prison Family Contact on Prisoners' Family Relationships, 21 J. of Contemp. Crim. Just. 314, 316

(2005); Rebecca L. Naser & Christy A. Visher, Family Members' Experiences with Incarceration and Reentry, 7 W. Criminology Rev. 20, 21 (2006). The Federal Bureau of Prisons has recognized that "telephone privileges are a supplemental means of maintaining community and family ties that will contribute to an inmate's personal development." 28 C.F.R. § 540.100(a). And Congress, in reenacting the Second Chance Act of 2007, cited "evidence to suggest that inmates who are connected to their children and families are more likely to avoid negative incidents and have reduced sentences." 34 U.S.C. § 60501. Fortunately, the Constitution safeguards us against the world where a person must sacrifice familial ties to preserve his privacy.

B. Requiring prosecutors to secure warrants in order to access jail calls is the only adequate way to protect the constitutional and policy interests the calls implicate.

Once a court confirms that a privacy right exists, it considers the level of protection appropriate to safeguard that right. State v. Lunsford, 226 N.J. 129, 136 (2016). "As a general rule, the greater the degree of intrusion into one's private matters by the government, the greater the level of protection that should apply." Id. at 131. Phone conversations have commanded a warrant's protection for more than half a century under the federal constitutional law that comprises New Jersey's doctrinal floor. See Katz, 389 U.S. at 353. This Court need not look further than this long-standing precedent to extend the warrant requirement to recorded jail calls. But should it harbor any doubt, the Court may look also to the momentous constitutional and policy interests that envelope an incarcerated person's calls. The State's warrantless intrusion into Jackson's recorded conversations implicated Jackson's First, Fifth, and Sixth Amendment rights. Equally, the State's actions implicate the rights of every individual that is subject to pretrial detention in New Jersey - 8,669 individuals in 2018 alone² - for whom primary communications with the outside world are, by design and necessity, funneled through the jail telephone system.

The Fourth Amendment and article 1, paragraph 7 reflect the drafters' intent to safeguard free expression from unrestrained search and seizure powers. See Marcus v. Search Warrants of Prop. at 104 E. Tenth St., 367 U.S. 717, 729 (1961). Courts must apply the warrant requirement with "scrupulous exactitude" when significant First Amendment rights are involved. See Stanford v. Texas, 379 U.S. 476, 485 (1965). The Supreme Court reinforced this principle in Riley v. California, requiring a warrant for cellphone searches incident to arrest in part because “[m]odern cell phones, as a category, implicate privacy concerns far beyond those implicated” by typical physical searches. 134 S. Ct. 2473, 2488-89 (2014). The Court did so again in Carpenter, casting aside the third-party doctrine to require a warrant for historical cell phone location records, which reveal not just “particular movements, but through them [one’s] ‘familial, political, professional, religious, and sexual associations.’” 138 S. Ct. at 2217 (quoting United States v. Jones, 565 U.S. 400, 415 (2012) (Sotomayor, J., concurring)).

² Criminal Justice Reform Statistics: Jan. 1 - Dec. 31, 2018, Criminal Justice Reform Information Center, available at <https://www.njcourts.gov/courts/assets/criminal/cjrreport2018.pdf?c=QDt>.

Telephone conversations are pure expression and association. If the State must get a warrant to look through garbage because it contains “[c]lues to people’s most private traits and affairs,” Hempele, 120 N.J. at 201, surely the State must also get a warrant to go straight to the source. A conversation does not merely hint at social, political, and personal activities “of an indisputably private nature,” Jones, 565 U.S. at 415 (Sotomayor, J., concurring) (quoting People v. Weaver, 909 N.E.2d 1196, 1999 (N.Y. 2009)), a conversation is such an activity. And because an incarcerated person has limited opportunity to speak with friends and family face-to-face—and because jails also monitor mail—the telephone is his principal outlet for intimate communications.

It is also a pre-trial detainee's primary means of directing and coordinating his defense. The Fifth Amendment's Due Process Clause, the Sixth Amendment, and article I, paragraph 10 of the New Jersey Constitution afford him the right to do so without a prosecutor's direct knowledge or interference. Once the Sixth Amendment has attached, for example, the accused has "the right to rely on counsel as a 'medium' between him and the State." Maine v. Moulton, 474 U.S. 159, 176 (1985). Thereafter, "the prosecutor and police have an affirmative obligation not to act in a manner that circumvents and thereby dilutes the protection afforded by [it]." Id. at 171. And the New Jersey Supreme Court has held that our State Constitution affords "greater protection of the right to counsel." State v. Sanchez, 129 N.J. 261, 274 (1992).

Even seemingly innocuous, non-privileged details divulged in a phone call could, if exposed to the State, undermine an incarcerated person's right to counsel and right to prepare a defense. The United States Supreme Court has recognized that "the most critical period of the proceedings [for an accused is] . . . from the time of their arraignment until the beginning of their trial, when consultation, thorough-going investigation and preparation [are] vitally important." Powell v. Alabama, 287 U.S. 45, 57 (1932). For example, during this time, an accused, working to assist in his defense, may wish to provide counsel with contact information regarding potential fact and character witnesses. For someone who is incarcerated with no access to their cell phone or social media account, they may need to communicate with family and friends to assist in obtaining this information. An eavesdropping prosecutor will be given access to the names and contact information for these individuals—and perhaps, too, the accused's social media accounts and passwords.

Privacy is not only valuable in and of itself; it is also the first line of defense against encroachment on other rights, including those guaranteed by the First, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments. Exposing incarcerated people's conversations to the government undermines their speech and associational rights and their right to prepare a defense through counsel. It also threatens the State's penological interests, because permitting incarcerated people to maintain relationships through private communications promotes institutional security and reduces recidivism. In other words, the stakes of preserving Jackson's privacy were unusually high.

The State cannot overcome Jackson's vital privacy interests in his recorded conversations by claiming any investigative exigency. See Lunsford, 226 N.J. at 282. Certainly, "to amass enough evidence to meet the [probable cause] standard inevitably slows down investigations in the early stages." Id. But expedience has never sufficed to justify curtailing privacy rights. Indeed, a core purpose of wiretap laws is to limit the use of intercepts so that they are not "routinely employed as the initial step in criminal investigation." United States v. Giordano, 416 U.S. 505, 515 (1974); State v. Fornino, 223 N.J. Super. 531, 544 (App. Div. 1988) (noting that the New Jersey act was modeled after the federal Wiretap Act but intended to be even more restrictive in some respects under State v. Catania, 85 N.J. 418, 436-439 (1981)).

There is nothing in the facts of this case, nor any argument by the State, to suggest that the government should be held to a lower standard of proof for access to jail calls in order to prevent loss of evidence or meet any other investigative need. If, say, jail personnel overheard an incarcerated person coordinating an imminent assault on someone on the outside, a prosecutor might be able to request the person's calls without a warrant. This is not such a case. Jackson posed no public safety threat. Neither Jackson nor his recorded calls were going anywhere. Requiring the State to seek a warrant before invading Jackson's substantial privacy rights would not have been unduly burdensome or time consuming and the Constitution demands nothing less.

Conclusion

Both the U.S. and New Jersey constitutions require the State to secure a warrant in order to access recorded conversations between incarcerated people and their friends and family on the outside. This Court should affirm the sound decision below.

Respectfully submitted,

Liza Weisberg (247192017)
Alexander Shalom
Jeanne LoCicero
American Civil Liberties Union of New Jersey Foundation
PO Box 32159
Newark, NJ 07102
(973) 854-1703
lweisberg@aclu-nj.org
Counsel for Amicus Curiae, the American Civil Liberties Union of New Jersey

Daniella Gordon (39362005)
Hyland Levin Shapiro LLP
6000 Sagemore Drive, Suite 6301
Marlton, NJ 08053
(856) 355-2915
gordon@hylandlevin.com
Counsel for Amicus Curiae, the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers

Sharon Bittner Kean (020601995)
President, Association of Criminal
Defense Lawyers of New Jersey
244 Green Village Road
Madison, NJ 07940

(973) 236-9400
sharonkean@keanlaw.com
Counsel for Amicus Curiae, the Association of Criminal Defense
Lawyers of New Jersey

Dated: February 11, 2019